Name

The name Ghibli was given by Hayao Miyazaki with reference to the Caproni Ca.309 Ghibli.[4] The Italian word "ghibli" is based on the Libyan-Arabic name for the simoon, or Mediterranean wind, the idea being the studio would "blow a new wind through the anime industry".[4][5] Although the Italian word is pronounced with a hard "g" (/ˈɡ/), Miyazaki intended the Japanese pronunciation to be with a soft g (/ʤ/).[6]

History

Founded in June 1985, the studio is headed by the directors Hayao Miyazaki and Isao Takahata and the producer Toshio Suzuki. Prior to the formation of the studio, Miyazaki and Takahata had already had long careers in Japanese film and television animation and had attained international fame. Suzuki had been a journalist for the publication Animage before he began working with Miyazaki and Takahata.

The studio was founded after the success of the 1984 film Nausicaä of the Valley of the Wind, written and directed by Miyazaki for Topcraft and distributed by Toei Company. The origins of the film lie in the first two volumes of a serialized manga written by Miyazaki for Animage, which had been published by Tokuma Shoten since 1982. Because Toei was part of the production team on the film and Tokuma Shoten owned Animage, they also invited Takahata to join the new studio.

The studio has mainly produced films by Miyazaki, with the second most prolific director being Takahata (most notably with Grave of the Fireflies). Other directors who have worked with Studio Ghibli include Hiromasa Yonebayashi, Hiroshi Morita, Gorō Miyazaki, and Hiromasa Yamashita. Composer Joe Hisaishi has provided the soundtracks for most of Miyazaki's Studio Ghibli films. In their book Anime Classics: Jidaigeki to Mecha, Stuart Galbraith IV and Toshiyuki Tsuru write that "Hisaishi's music is as much a star of Miyazaki's films as Miyazaki himself".[7] He has also composed the soundtracks of Takahata's films.

In August 1996, Disney and Tokuma Shoten Publishing agreed that Disney would distribute internationally Tokuma's Studio Ghibli animated films.[8]

Many of Ghibli's films in Japan are theatrically distributed by Toho while home video releases are handled by Walt Disney Studios Home Entertainment internationally. In Japan, Ghibli's films have frequently been released in March, which is the end of the Japanese financial year, to take advantage of the tax benefits.[9] Ghibli's international releases are handled by Walt Disney Studios Motion Pictures International and Buena Vista International, with Walt Disney Studios Home Entertainment releasing the films on home video.

Two Studio Ghibli short films created for the Ghibli Museum were shown at the Carnegie Hall Citycopia Japan NYC Festival: "Mouse Hunting" and "Mon Mon the Water Spider".[10]

Takahata Arekurui a project for release after Goh Hiraishi's Shadow of Tales from Earthsea and Hayao's next From Up on Poppy Hill – an adaptation of The Cat Returns manga, Baron: The Cat Who Lives by Map, was announced in January 2012. It was to be directed by Hiroyuki Morita, with Reiko Yoshida writing the screenplay.[11]

On Sunday, September 1, 2013, Hayao Miyazaki held a press conference in Venice to confirm his retirement, saying: "I know I've said I would retire many times in the past. Now, this time, I really mean it."[12] He is 72 years old.

On January 31, 2014, it was announced that Gorō Miyazaki will direct his first anime TV series, Sarusuberi no Miyamae Ryūgo, an adaptation of Astrid Lindgren's Mio, My Son, produced by Dwango and Nippon Animation and premiering on Fuji TV's Noitamina programming block.[13][14][15] Gorō Miyazaki

On March 2014, Toshio Suzuki retired as a producer and assumed a new position of general manager. Yoshiaki Nishimura replaced Suzuki in the producer position.[16]

On August 5, 2014, Toshio Suzuki announced that Studio Ghibli would take a "brief pause" to re-evaluate and restructure in the wake of Miyazaki's retirement. He stated some concerns about where the company stood up in the future.[17] This has led to speculation that Studio Ghibli will never produce another feature film.[18] Suzuki also announced that Studio Ghibli will not produce any more shorts. Although, All Ghibli was announced that I would be retiring and not making any more films.[19]
