Cheeky 'jail break' girl asks media to use 'better photo' on Facebook

storm after she asked a TV station to use a 'better photo' of her when reporting her escape.

in Sydney on Friday, August 19, before running away.

And as is fairly standard practice, police issued a statement accompanied by two photographs they had taken of the 18-year-old

But the search took an unexpected turn when the pictures and police

Brazenly, the first person to comment on the story and the photos

Clearly unhappy with how she looked in the police mugshots, in which she wore a glum expression and a red blanket draped over her shoulders, she uploaded a more flattering shot in the comments

"Can you use this photo please, and thank you. Yours truly Amy Sharp small"

The comment, which was accompanied with a smiling emoji with a halo, was liked more than 47,000 times and attracted numerous comments.

Bec Sackville posted "Haha that's a classic. Think the cops have found a new way to catch crims. Just put out an ugly photo and the crim will

Police said that shortly after 3pm on Friday, August 19, Amy Sharp was in the Surry Hills Corrective Services Cell Complex when she fled

Police did not consider her a risk to members of the public saying she

She was later caught in Wentworth Park, not far from where she allegedly escaped and is expected to be charged.
