Are you a runner? Are you in NYC? Do you want to help science? Consider volunteering for this @TheRealNYCEP study with @HermanPontzer

Researchers: Jennifer Eyre, Dr. Herman Pontzer
Title: Thermoregulation During Running and Walking in Adult Humans

Purpose and background
The effects of body size and proportions on people's ability to thermoregulate (i.e., maintain a normal body temperature) during exercise are understudied. This project will measure body temperature during running in healthy, adult men and women during running and walking. Subjects will walk on a treadmill and run outside while their body temperature is monitored using ingested capsules. These capsules are FDA approved for this purpose, pose no known risks, and are routinely used in these types of studies; the capsules relay body temperature to a handheld monitor in real time, wirelessly, via 'bluetooth' signal. Walking trials will take place in the Pontzer Lab (727 North Building, Hunter College). Running trials will take place either in Central Park, the Astoria Park track or the East River Park. Running trials will last 60 minutes each. In the walking trials (30 minutes each), subjects will wear a heart rate monitor and light plastic mask to measure oxygen consumption and carbon dioxide production, to calculate their energy expenditure. Results will be used to test hypotheses relating variation in body size and proportions to people's ability to thermoregulate in cool, normal, and warm conditions during exercise. These findings will improve our understanding of human physiology and may help inform strategies for preventing overheating or hypothermia during exercise.
