Storyline

An alien starship dumps a space-trash in a swamp in a U.S. National Park. Some mosquitoes begin to feed from the alien's corpses, causing them to grow to the size of a vulture. These mutant insects became very aggressive, killing every human being they find. Will the few survivors fight successfully against this nightmare...?

Trivia
When the mosquitoes attack Mike Hard, part of the scene originally included a shot of the bugs landing on him from a far away angle. The puppet mosquitoes kept hitting him in the head. After almost 10 takes, Hard was developing a concussion, so the scene was scrapped. See more »

Goofs
When an animal increases in size, its weight increases by the cube of the increase, while surface area only increases by the square. That means the mutant mosquitoes would be trapped on the ground, helpless. Their legs would not support them, and their wings would not let them fly. See more »

The funniest movie ever.
31 May 1999 | by Dave Ebb - See all my reviews

I consider myself fortunate to have caught "Mosquito" on a Sunday matinee. The opening scene depicts a huge mosquito smashing against a car windshield and the acting only gets worse from there. We get to see the "deputy" with a full beard in one scene lose the beard when the camera cuts back to him (stellar editing). We also get to see the main character who is the human incarnation of South Park's "Chef." My sidesplit when Gunnar Hansen (a.k.a. Leatherface) picks up a chainsaw and says: "I haven't handled one of these things in 20 years...feels good." A commonly-used, extremely cheesy line is also: ".if I wasn't having such a bad day, I'd kill you." Anyway, go rent this, but you might have some trouble finding it (try a mom 'n pop video store).
