With only 50% of the three film’s footage retained and over 300 edits in the project, along with its provided audio commentary discussing the book, the presentation of the material was clearly transformative and did not intend to replace the likeness of the original three films, but rather act as an alternate viewing for those that already purchased and viewed the source material, with the project’s true intent being to preserve the impact of J.R.R. Tolkien’s 1937 novel The Hobbit.
