Actor James Van Der Beek will once again be selling collector’s items from some of his beloved films and TV shows, including Dawson’s Creek, to help pay for his treatment for colorectal cancer.

“I’ve been storing these treasures for years, waiting for the right time to do something with them, and with all of the recent unexpected twists and turns life has presented recently, it’s clear that the time is now,” Van Der Beek told People.

The collection, which includes an outfit he wore in the Dawson’s Creek pilot, and a hat featured in the 1999 film Varsity Blues, will be auctioned at Propstore’s annual Winter Entertainment Memorabilia Live Auction, which runs from 5 December to 7 December.

This is a role on television that he had revealed in his memoir, Sidelined, in 2020. A cancer diagnosis in 2020. A cancer diagnosis in 2020. A cancer diagnosis in 2020.

“While it’s good to see who has been successful in the industry, it’s also good to see who has been struggling.”
