@nixCraft Voted "always" but "they ignore me anyway" is also true.

@nixCraft Always full goodbye ritual, which simply means saying "bye bye" in case they're home when I leave.

I need to say goodbye to my dogs and explain to them they need to stay and wait but I'll be back. And maybe give them a treat.

Otherwise they'll race out the front door completely convinced that it's adventure time.

@nixCraft I do say "Guard the house" if he's left by himself. It's always worked so far.

@nixCraft voted always. But usually full cuddles a bit before and then a bit later just leave without big goodbyes. This helps the animals if they are anxious of you being gone.

I always say goodbye to my mother Juna. It's a small gesture but it means the world.

@nixCraft considering the cat is usually asleep on kiddo's bed when I'm leaving (she comes down for a feed when I wake up and then heads back up to sleep some more with kiddo) then she is too far away to say ciao to, and if I yell I may wake people up!

@nixCraft Saying goodbye also doubles as checking, that the cats are not locked in any room / closet / balcony.

@pesasa@mastodon.social @nixCraft@mastodon.social Exactly. That's my biggest fear, so I'd prefer to see them near the window where I can see them before I bike away!

@nixCraft I belong to the staff of two cats (male). They usually ignore me, when I'm around.

@nixCraft I think you should make two distinct polls, one for dogs and one for cats, since behaviours might be quite different.

@nixCraft I also say goodbye to other people's pets when leaving their homes.

And to wild non-human animals when out in the woods or for walks.

Honestly I'm more likely to do a greet/goodbye for non-humans than for humans.

@nixCraft I usually have to calm my roommate's doggy, that I'll be back home before I go out. I'm not sure whether that counts.
