1. My Raspberry Pi 3 is currently running DeepSeek V4 Flash and it sounds like a 1987 Kawasaki dirt bike trying to merge onto a freeway.
2.
3. The fan – a tiny 30mm aftermarket unit I bought from a seller in Shenzhen whose store was called "Good Wind Technology" – has begun oscillating between two pitches that my neighbor, a retired oboist, described as "a minor second, which is historically the interval of lamentation."
4.
5. She stood in my doorway for a full minute listening to it.
6.
7. "What is it doing?" she asked.
8.
9. "Summarizing a PDF," I said.
10.
11. She left without another word.
12.
13. The Pi has been working on this summary for what I can only describe as geological time. Meanwhile the model occasionally outputs a token, like a deep-sea creature blinking once in the dark. I have started bringing it water. Not because it needs water. Just out of respect.
14.
15. There is something genuinely moving about watching a $35 computer attempt a task that would make a data center sweat. It is the computational equivalent of Reinhold Messner summiting Everest without oxygen – technically inadvisable, borderline delusional, and yet somehow the only honest way to do it.
16.
17. The PDF summary just arrived.
18.
19. It says "the document discusses various topics."
20.
21. Incredible. Worth every hour.
